

Radically Open DBT

For those of us who are over-controlled

Presented by Katherine Calvert MSW, LCSW and Kirsten McAteer, LPC

Who: Does it feel like no one really gets what it is like to be you, especially by some of the closest people to you? Have you learned to mask, suppress or control those hurt and tender feelings? Do you consider yourself shy? Do you pride yourself on your self-control and yet at times feel overwhelmed and underappreciated? Is it hard for you to enjoy or even take downtime or to break one of your own rules? Do you sometimes feel all alone, even surrounded by people, and no one would guess how miserable you feel on the inside.

What: Come explore with us how to put joy back in your life. Learn concrete skills to loosen up your temperament (the way you are wired) so it works for you and not against you. Come hear about cutting edge research on effective skills to change your old patterns and habits, learn how to enhance intimacy and reduce very private experience of self-loathing or criticism. These skills are particularly helpful with perfectionism, over-work and restrictive eating disordered behaviors. This information is being presented for the first time in the United States after receiving acclaim in England, Sweden, Germany and Spain.
